

MEMORANDUM TO GOVERNMENT BY THE HON. MINISTER OF COLLECTIONS AND FOREIGN AFFAIRS AND THE
HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Diplomatic Immunities and Privileges Bill, 1965.

Since independence, and with the opening of diplomatic missions in Malta, the need has been felt to provide legislatively for the extension of such privileges and immunities to diplomatic personnel as are customarily acceded under international law. The position to date has been somewhat anomalous in that whilst legislation exists for the grant of privileges and immunities to International Organisations (Diplomatic Privileges (Extension) Act 1950) and to Consular Officers (Consular Conventions Act 1955), no legislation is in force to protect the traditional rights and immunities which diplomatic officers everywhere enjoy.

2. Administrative instructions were, it is true, issued in October 1964, by OPM Circular No. 32/64, which ensured that fiscal privileges, i.e. exemption from taxes, duties, etc., were accorded in practice to both diplomatic and consular officers and employees (the Consular Conventions Act 1955 does not provide for fiscal privileges). In so far as fiscal privileges are concerned, therefore, it has been possible so far to live up to the obligations which any country is expected to fulfil towards representatives of other States. But where legal immunities are concerned, the position hitherto has been fraught with danger inasmuch as there is no legal recognition of any such rights and immunities, and the possibility has always existed, for instance, of a diplomatic officer having to appear in court in a case instituted against him despite the fact that, at international law, immunity from jurisdiction is one of the basic privileges with which such officers are invested.

3. The present Bill is accordingly designed to give legislative effect to the privileges and immunities which are normally accorded under international law to diplomatic representatives. It also provides for the granting of fiscal privileges to consular representatives by an order of the Minister responsible for external affairs and, in order to have all legislation on the subject enshrined in one comprehensive enactment, it also absorbs the Diplomatic Privileges (Extension) Act, 1950 - regarding privileges and immunities of International Organisations - which is accordingly being repealed.

4. The Bill, which is broadly based in its provisions on similar legislation enacted in other Commonwealth countries, incorporates all the articles dealing with privileges and immunities contained in the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 1961, and makes them part of the law of Malta. This Convention, which incidentally was "inherited" by Malta as one of the international instruments to have been concluded by Britain and applied to Malta prior to the latter's independence, is largely a codification of generally accepted rules of international customary law governing diplomatic intercourse, privileges and immunities. It has been ratified by most countries of the world and it represents the most recent and widest agreement between states on the subject.

5. It has not been considered prudent for the Bill to incorporate, in a similar manner, the relevant articles of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, 1963. This Convention, unlike its predecessor on diplomatic relations is somewhat revolutionary inasmuch as international law and practice in the consular field have always been much less developed than in the diplomatic field. Consequently, the codification of rules in the consular field aroused considerable controversy and also entailed the development of a substantial element of new law. This is reflected in the fact that so far only six countries have ratified the Convention. The advice of the Crown Advocate-General is that there should not be any commitment at this stage in respect of the Consular Convention, but rather that Malta should wait for action in this field to be taken by other (and possibly more experienced) countries. The draft Bill therefore makes wide provisions in respect of consular immunities and privileges so as to cover the eventual granting of exemption from taxes, duties, rates, fees and other dues provided for in the Consular Convention without however actually enshrining the relative provisions of the Convention in the law of Malta. When eventually the way is seen to be clear towards ratification and implementation of the Consular Convention, all that will be needed is simply to substitute for clause 4 of the Bill a new section enshrining the relevant provisions of the Convention in the law of Malta and providing for the construction of certain expressions, as is now being done in the Bill in clause 3 (with regard to the Diplomatic Relations Convention).

6. Some innovations, vis-à-vis comparable U.K. legislation, are to be found in clause 2, subclause (2) and in clause 5, subclause (3). As regards the former, the difficulty of equating consular relations to analogous ones in the intra-Commonwealth field (and in this the Bill anticipates, but in bonis, U.K. legislation) is resolved by providing that references in the Bill to "consular officers", "consular employees" and "members of a consular post" shall be construed as including references to persons in the service of any Commonwealth country other than Malta holding certain categories of offices. A similar provision goes into the Consular Conventions Act, 1955, which is being amended as shown in the Third Schedule to the Bill.

7. Under subclause (3) of clause 5, provision has been taken for the implementation of any eventual international agreement to which Malta may become a party, relating to diplomatic privileges and immunities of international organizations or persons connected with them. This has been done by providing that an order made under clause 5 may, notwithstanding any provision of any written law, including the Bill, confer on any organization or person any privileges which are required to be conferred on it/him in order to give effect to any international agreement. A safeguard is added in the sense that such an order shall not confer any privileges greater than those so required, nor shall it confer any privileges upon any person as the representative or a member of the staff of the representative of the Government of Malta.

8. An important provision of the Bill is to be found in clause 12, referring to the principle of reciprocity. Under this clause, privileges and immunities accorded to representatives in Malta of any State may be restricted if Maltese representatives in that State are accorded less favourable privileges and immunities than those conferred by the Bill.

9. Hon. Ministers are invited to recommend the early enactment of the Diplomatic Immunities and Privileges Bill, 1965.

Estate, succession and inheritance duties shall not be levied on movable property the presence of which in the receiving State was due solely to the presence there of the deceased as a member of the mission or as a member of the family of a member of the mission.

ARTICLE 40

1. If a diplomatic agent passes through or is in the territory of a third State, which has granted him a passport visa if such visa was necessary, while proceeding to take up or to return to his post, or when returning to his own country, the third State shall accord him inviolability and such other immunities as may be required to ensure his transit or return.
